Trish Cooper, the accountant for the Nampa & Meridian Irrigation District, will retire after 40 years with the valley's largest irrigation district, the District announced.

A special open house to honor her retirement will be held September 11 at the NMID Office, 1503 First Street South in Nampa. The public is invited to join in wishing her a long and happy retirement, NMID officials said.

Cooper started with the District in 1974 in the Collection Department. Over her career she has worked with thousands of taxpayers plus many employees and dozens of members of the District Board of Directors.

“She has endeavored to make certain the District's water users interest will be well guarded in her former capacity by being a trainer and reliable co-worker. Her knowledge of the District and the detail of its financial and administrative functions have made her a remarkable resource to the District and its patrons,” said Daren Coon, NMID Secretary Treasurer.

Trish is married. She says she plans to spend quality time in retirement with her husband Ken, her children Nichole, Dusty and Ross and her grandchildren.
